THE FIRST HISTORIC LUNAR COLOUR

For the very first time, you can actually see the colour of the Moon. Old Glory casts a sharp shadow on the lunar surface surrounded by the most historic footprints man ever made. On the right is the shadow of the lunar module, and in the background the camera which televised the astronauts' activities on the Moon.

ROCKS WORTH THEIR WEIGHT IN GOLD . . .

A close-up view of the lunar rocks contained in the first Apollo 11 sample return container. The rock box was opened for the first time in the Vacuum Laboratory of the Manned Spacecraft Centre's Lunar Receiving Laboratory, Building 37, on Saturday. The gloved hand gives an indication of size. This box also contained the Solar Wind Composition experiment and two core tubes for subsurface samples.

A SPECIAL CARAVAN

The lounge area of the mobile quarantine facility designed and engineered by American Standard's Melpar Division. This equipment provided self-contained, comfortable living accommodation for six persons during transportation by ship, aircraft and truck to Houston, Texas, after recovery. The facility provided continued biological isolation by maintaining a negative pressure differential and filtration of all effluent gases.

APOLLO PICTURE PARADE

Right: A view from the right hand window of the Apollo 11 lunar module showing the surface of the Moon in the vicinity of where the LEM touched down. Numerous small rocks and craters can be seen between the LEM and the lunar horizon.

Earth from Apollo 11. This is how the Earth looked to astronauts in Apollo 11. At top left of the photograph is Europe, and top centre is Asia.

Resting after his Moon walk. This photograph of Neil Armstrong, Apollo 11 commander, was taken inside the lunar module while the LEM rested on the lunar surface. Astronauts Armstrong and Edwin Aldrin had already completed their extravehicular activity when this picture was taken.
